DEAR READER,

Heinz-Peter Schlüter, founder and owner of TRIMET, husband, and father, died on November 29, 2015. This caused a good deal of anguish to myself and my children. His untimely departure was also a great loss for TRIMET. With his death, we have lost a person who effectively shaped the company, a visionary with his feet placed firmly on the ground and a gifted motivator. Heinz-Peter Schlüter created TRIMET and left his mark on the company for 30 years. He guided the family business to continuous growth and inspired people for collaborative goals. Time and again.

At TRIMET, entrepreneurial activity is closely linked with social commitment. For him and for us, medium-sized entrepreneurship is not just a hollow phrase, but expresses the deep conviction that an employer must also show responsibility – to employees, to customers, and to society. For Heinz-Peter Schlüter, responsibility was not an abstract concept, but a practiced action. Personally, I also believe that it is important to carry this spirit of responsibility into the future.

As a young businessman, my husband dared to take the leap into self-employment when he could no longer implement his ideas with his former company. At a time when major corporations were turning their back on aluminium production in Germany and Europe, he entered the field of industrial production as a merchant. In 1985, he started TRIMET as a metals trading company with three employees. Today, the company has more than 3,000 employees and is one of the leading aluminium producers in Europe.

My husband always linked entrepreneurial activity with social commitment. In addition to the Hans Joachim Kaps Foundation, which he founded in 1997 to promote young talent in the metals trade and oversaw thereafter, he committed himself with donations and personal drive to children, the socially disadvantaged, and those sick or disabled. He supported the important work of social and medical facilities throughout Germany. Due to his empathy, Heinz-Peter Schlüter knew how to motivate his staff and challenge his conversational partners. My husband opened opportunities up to others so that they could test, design, and implement their own ideas. He was a visionary and could inspire other people with his visions and ideas. He was also a very brave entrepreneur who did not rely solely on figures and lifeless data to make his decisions. But Heinz-Peter Schlüter was not an adventurer – he always did his utmost to limit risks and keep them calculable. A gifted communicator, he was also a good listener, always approachable, and willing to engage himself in every issue. In this way, he continually involved myself and our children, who work for TRIMET, in his decision making. For him, there was no difference between life and work. The separation of these two areas was completely foreign to him.

As an avid marathon runner, Heinz-Peter Schlüter was a man for the long haul. He took great care in preserving TRIMET's self-image, even in the face of enormous growth and diversification. Therefore, even before leaving operational management in 2009, my husband had already ensured that TRIMET would be stable over time and retain its character as an independent, family-run enterprise. At an early stage, he gradually transferred operational management of the TRIMET Group to the Management Board of TRIMET Aluminium SE. The Management Board, whose members have been successfully guiding TRIMET for many years, will continue to lead the company – true to the ideals of the founder and the Schlüter family. Additionally, the Supervisory Board is working, as it has always done, to safeguard the long-term existence of the company.

Karin Schlüter, owner and member of the Management Board of TRIMET SE

The special spirit of TRIMET, which my husband influenced and advanced for 30 years, lives on. With the family foundation, into which half of the corporate assets have been transferred. And, of course, with us, his family, which holds the other half of the company shares in TRIMET. This is the family's wish and thus the commitment of the family foundation and the Supervisory Board. I am proud that my sons are already integrated within the company, allowing them to carry the family spirit forward in the next generation. They are doing everything in their power to secure the future of the family business TRIMET. That which has been the basis of TRIMET's success for more than 30 years will continue in the future: this is what the employees of TRIMET stand for. This is what the Schlüter family stands for. The spirit of entrepreneurial and social responsibility, with which my husband made this company so unique, will also determine TRIMET's path in the future. TRIMET is a family business, and will remain one – forward-looking, with long-term planning, and, above all, independent.

I would like to warmly thank all the employees for their successful work, support, and loyalty.

Warm regards,

Karin Schlüter

TRIMET ON THE RHINE AND THE RUHR – CONTINUING 200 YEARS OF INDUSTRIAL HISTORY

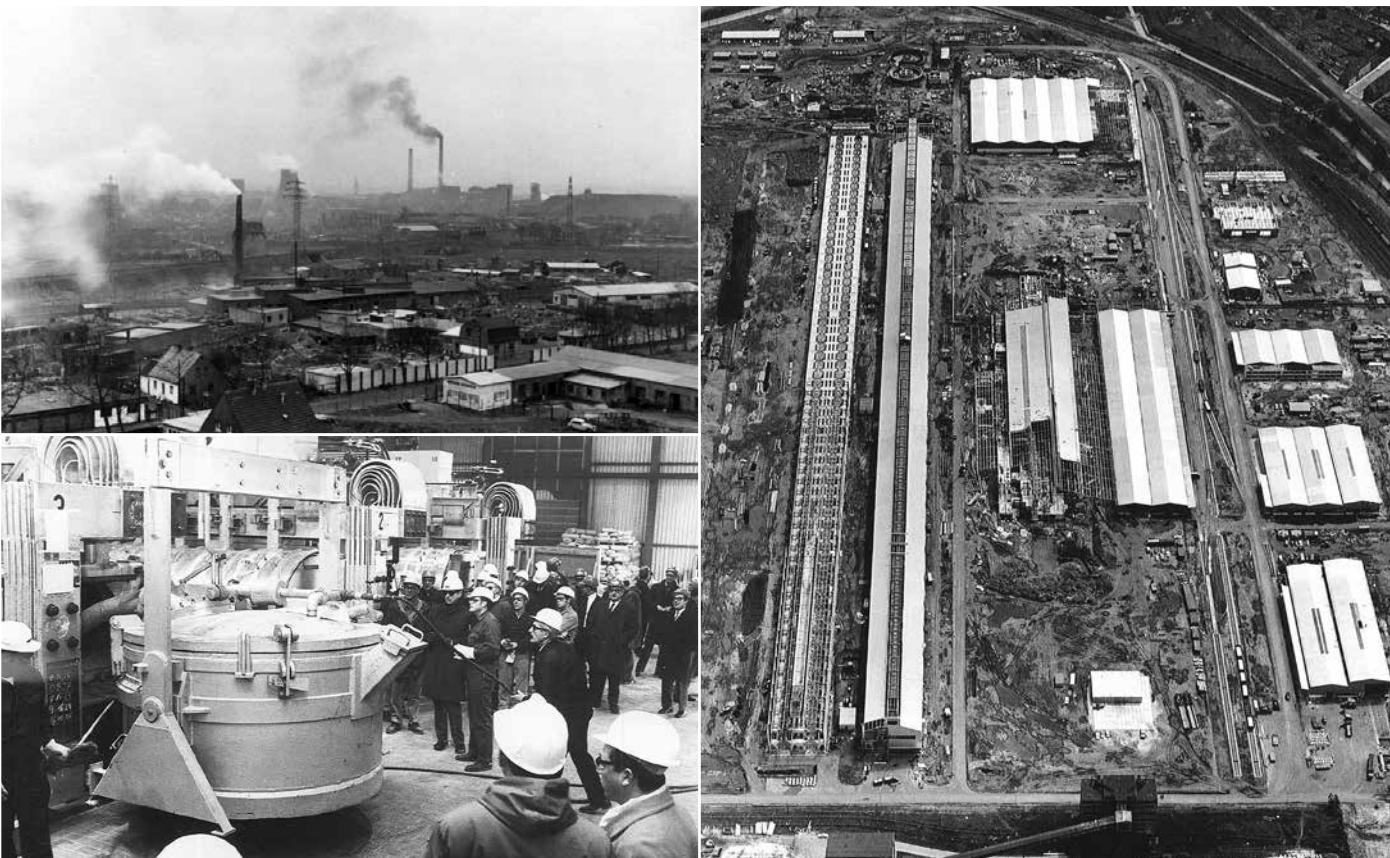

TRIMET is a young company. But it unifies nearly 200 years of industry expertise. TRIMET's production facilities look back on a long tradition in metalworking. The TRIMET locations on the Rhine and the Ruhr also build on the industrial experiences of an historic economic area.

The locations Essen, Voerde, and Gelsenkirchen form TRIMET's aluminium triangle in North Rhine-Westphalia. Together, some 1,250 employees annually produce 430,000 tons of the light metal here. And the fact that TRIMET's aluminium heart beats on the Rhine and the Ruhr is no coincidence. Metal extraction and industrial value creation have shaped the region and continue to characterize it right up to the present day.

As a center of industrial production, the region had many base-load power stations and an outstanding infrastructure. These were ideal locational factors for the production of the young material aluminium. Only a fraction of the quantities needed until then were produced in Germany. To use the available material as efficiently as possible, refineries were constructed for the recycling of aluminium scrap.

One of these was "Metallwerke Jacobs," which opened in 1936 in Gelsenkirchen. Today, these metal processing plants form the eastern corner of the TRIMET aluminium triangle. In the late 1960s, some 10,000 tons of aluminium scrap were remelted annually here. In 1972, the Klöckner Group took over the site. In 1992, the plant was acquired by Sommer Metallwerke GmbH, which went into insolvency just a short time later. At the time, Heinz-Peter Schlüter was purely a metals trader, operating under the name TRIMET. But he recognized the opportunity to successfully sell aluminium from his own production. By recycling the aluminium scrap, TRIMET could solve its customers' disposal problem while simultaneously providing a high-quality material. With the plant's takeover by TRIMET in 1993, the site and nearly 50 jobs were saved. Today, nearly 100 employees work here, annually recycling more than 60,000 tons of aluminium scrap.

In January 1971, an aluminium smelter with an attached foundry and an output that would soon grow to almost 126,000 tons a year was established in Essen-Borbeck. The site was operated by Leichtmetall-Gesellschaft mbH (LMG), a joint operation between Alusuisse and the Metallgesellschaft conglomerate. In 1994, the smelter – meanwhile the exclusive property of Alusuisse – was slated for closure. Shortly before the final closure, TRIMET took over the location with what was then a staff of about 350, thereby entering into the production of primary aluminium. Since then, TRIMET has invested heavily in the location. The electrolysis hall and foundry have continually been modernized and expanded. Today, approximately 750 employees work at TRIMET's Essen location. From an annual production of 165,000 tons of electrolytic aluminium, up to 300,000 tons of foundry products are now produced through the addition of recycled scrap.

On New Year's Day, 1971, in Voerde on the Lower Rhine, the second aluminium smelter in the region went into operation. After several changes of ownership, the plant with nearly 300 employees went bankrupt in 2012. Then, in May 2014, TRIMET acquired the aluminium electrolysis facilities and the anode factory and was able to restore all the jobs. The smelter works in close association with TRIMET locations in Essen and Gelsenkirchen, and has continuously increased its production capacity. Today, the aluminium smelter is working at full capacity and produces about 90,000 tons of electrolytic aluminium and 60,000 tons of carbon anodes annually.

Heinz-Peter Schlüter (1949–2015)

Heinz-Peter Schlüter, founder and owner of TRIMET, passed away on November 29, 2015. He created TRIMET and shaped the company's unique corporate spirit.

Schlüter started in 1985 with three employees, and today the family business has a staff of more than 3,000 and is one of the leading aluminum producers in Europe. Schlüter always combined entrepreneurial action and corporate citizenship. As a great businessman and responsible employer he set the course from the outset, in conjunction with his family and company management, for TRIMET to last as a sustainable, independent family enterprise for a long time to come.
