RELIABLE IN TIMES OF CHANGE

TRIMET can look back on a business year full of major challenges. A number of factors have influenced developments on the aluminium market. We are starting to feel the effects of an economic downturn, coupled with upheavals on the commodities markets. Widespread policies of restraint and uncertainty in the automotive industry have compounded the effects of these upheavals, as have international trade conflicts. Fluctuations in prices and demand may have different causes at different times, but they are always part of the aluminium market. Because TRIMET plans for the long term, our company has also taken precautions for such oscillations. We use peak periods to build up reserves that enable us to survive over periods of economic downturn.

25 years ago, TRIMET took over the Essen aluminium smelter, thereby entering into the production of primary aluminium. At that point in time, there were more than 30 aluminium smelters in Europe; today only twelve are left. With its domestic production sites, TRIMET is able to maintain its competitive edge by offering products close to where our customers are located. This strategy has proved to be successful, and it will continue to set the course for the future. This is what distinguishes TRIMET as an independent family business. We are able to actively shape changes that are currently underway and flexibly adapt to the prevailing market conditions. A clear view ahead confirms our approach. TRIMET produces a material with a high future potential, and the demand is immense. Road, rail and air transport will continue to require the light metal aluminium – regardless of the method of propulsion. Overland power lines, wind power and photovoltaic plants all use aluminium, the material of the energy transition.

TRIMET invests in ongoing improvements to its product quality and manufacturing processes. For instance, we comprehensively modernized our recycling plant in Gelsenkirchen. This has further reduced emissions from our remelting plants while also improving their energy efficiency. Additionally, we support the infrastructure in the vicinity of our sites. The aluminium smelter in Voerde will make process heat from the electrolysis furnaces available to a neighboring commercial enterprise. This not only promotes the regional economy, but saves energy and reduces CO₂ emissions. With a new wastewater system at the Essen site, TRIMET is contributing to the renaturation of the Emscher River and to landscape conservation in the Ruhr area.

TRIMET is well-equipped for the future. The further development of sustainable product and production standards is raising the quality of aluminium gained in domestic production – while also strengthening Germany as an industrial location. This makes us a reliable partner for our customers. TRIMET's employees guarantee reliability. They stand for our performance promise and the high quality of our products. They also meet the changing demands of the market. I would like to take this opportunity to thank all our staff members for their outstanding commitment in the service of the TRIMET family.

As a company that is committed to its locations and actively supports the transformation of the energy supply, we expect reliability from the world of politics. As facilities that can be switched off, TRIMET's aluminium smelters make a significant contribution to keeping our increasingly strained power grid in balance. And by making the electrolysis process more flexible, we have developed a method through which large industrial plants can adapt to fluctuating electricity volumes, thereby serving as a buffer between energy producers and consumers. We are now testing the process on an industrial scale. However, political stakeholders have not yet created viable conditions that will allow this virtual electricity storage facility to be operated economically.

Philipp Schlüter, CEO of TRIMET Aluminium SE

Another question today is whether the basic prerequisite for aluminium production can be guaranteed over the long term in Germany: a secure power supply at a competitive price. Both require rapid and reliable confirmation. After all, the aim cannot be to relocate all aluminium production outside Europe. This would not only signal the failure of the energy transition, but do a great disservice to the cause of climate protection. If that were the case, Germany would only process aluminium produced at much higher greenhouse gas emission levels.

Politicians repeatedly make commitments to Germany as an industrial location, but commitments can only be authenticated through actions. TRIMET is well-positioned for the future. In order to shape the future now, reliable framework conditions are indispensable.
