THE MATERIAL SOURCE FROM NEXT DOOR

TRIMET can look back on an extraordinary business year. Many unforeseeable challenges had to be overcome, the effects of which will accompany us for some time to come. The outbreak of the coronavirus pandemic in March 2020 marked a turning point. The threat of the virus and the measures taken to contain it also hit the global aluminium market with full force. In almost every industrialized country, the economy was shut down. The aluminium processing industry, especially the transport sector, also felt the impact.

The crisis has clearly shown us where the risks in our globalized economy lie. In many cases, a weak point in this system was revealed in the relocation of production areas to foreign countries. Supply chains were interrupted, and production plants came to a standstill. Our company also struggled with the consequences of these effects. Nevertheless, as a local producer we were still the reliable “material source from next door” – even during the critical lockdown phase. Our aluminium smelters and foundries were able to serve even last-minute orders and thus help keep important process chains in the industry intact.

We owe this achievement first and foremost to the outstanding commitment of our employees. In close coordination with the staff and the works council, we took precautions at all TRIMET locations to quickly ensure the highest possible level of health protection while simultaneously safeguarding production. Through their responsible and committed actions in this critical phase, our employees have sent a clear signal that has deeply impressed me. My respect and sincere thanks go out to them. The TRIMET family, through their collegial spirit, has once again been able to prove that our company stands for reliability and consistency, even in times of crisis – both in collaboration and in partnership with our customers.

With this experience, we look ahead to the future and are ready to tackle the tasks that lie before us. It is true that no one knows when the market will return to normal. But what is certain is that aluminium is a material with a future. The challenges of climate change demand industrial solutions in which lightweight construction plays a decisive role. For this reason, we are investing in technical upgrades and the modernization of our production facilities, driving forward the development of the material and working to continuously improve sustainable products and production standards. Despite the economic slump caused by the coronavirus pandemic, TRIMET continues to stand on a solid footing and has the leeway to shape this development.

For instance, we are increasing energy efficiency by digitizing production processes, adapting the operation of the aluminium smelters to the power supply from renewable energies and developing aluminium alloys that are geared to new processing technologies such as additive manufacturing. One focal point is the area of recycling. In our smelting plants and foundries, we produce materials that meet the most demanding requirements with a recycling content of up to 95 percent. Above all, these efforts are aimed at steadily reducing the CO₂ footprint of aluminium from Germany. In addition, as a family business, we are committed to sustainability in the aluminium industry. As a member of the Aluminium Stewardship Initiative (ASI), we are helping to establish international standards for the ecologically and socially sustainable production, processing and recycling of aluminium.

Philipp Schlüter, CEO of TRIMET Aluminium SE

The economic crisis caused by the coronavirus pandemic has clearly shown us how important it is to maintain industrial value chains. A closely-meshed network of different processing stages ensures prosperity and social peace in Germany through the preservation of jobs. People need a solid perspective for the future and we at TRIMET would like to give them this. We continue to believe in Germany as an industrial location and with our aluminium production, we can not only secure our jobs, but as a raw material producer also become the basis for many other processing agents that we deliver to regionally and who, in turn, do the same for their clients. This also has a positive effect on climate protection, because if one link in the value chain migrates, others will follow in the long run, and production sites will be relocated to countries that may manufacture under less sustainable conditions. We therefore face challenges that arise on a daily basis and will continue to do everything we can, together with our staff, to secure German aluminium production in the future.
